The petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to perform an urgent review of child protection practices in court proceedings for child arrangements orders to ensure Parental Alienation is understood, correctly and quickly identified and dealt with effectively ;further that changes are made to the Children Act 1989 to make it clearer that Parental Alienation is a welfare concern and should have greater consideration than a child's stated wishes and feelings to cut off all ties with an emotionally available, normal range parent i.e. a parent who is neither neglectful nor severely abusive ; further that changes are made to Section 76 and 66 of the Serious Crimes Act 2015 and the forthcoming Domestic Abuse Bill to provide examples of alienating behaviour and make it a criminal offence for anyone to break contact orders or make, or encourage a child to make, false and/or exaggerated accusations against a parent ;and further that a child's right to a relationship with both parents be enshrined in law with a principle of shared parenting along with their right to a relationship with extended family.

And the petitioners remain, etc.
